Meg Temple, MS, LPC, LPCS, is the Executive Director of CARE House of the Pee Dee, an accredited Child Advocacy Center serving children and families in South Carolina's Florence, Marion, Dillon, and Clarendon counties. She has worked in the child advocacy center movement since 2006 and has led CARE House since 2013.

A licensed professional counselor and supervisor, Meg brings clinical experience, nonprofit leadership, grant development, and multidisciplinary collaboration. She believes children and families deserve coordinated, compassionate support after abuse. CARE House brings child abuse services together in one location, where trained professionals provide care and coordinate with community partners. Families can access interviews, medical care, advocacy, trauma-focused therapy, and prevention education tailored to their needs.

Meg is committed to building a strong, sustainable organization while keeping children and families at the center of every decision. She has helped CARE House expand its programs, strengthen its financial footing, and develop a skilled team prepared to consistently meet community needs. She values collaboration, thoughtful leadership, and practical solutions that help both families and the professionals who serve them. Her work advances CARE House's mission to promote help, hope, and healing for children and families throughout the Pee Dee.
